Privacy Policy

This policy sets out to explain what happens to your personal data when you visit this website, and what your legal rights might be around this. The information that you communicate will only be used in accordance with this Privacy Policy. This Privacy Policy may be updated, according to legislative changes, and these alterations will be posted here.

You are indicating that you understand, accept, and consent to the practices detailed in this Policy by continuing to use my website merrimayers.co.uk or by contacting me by email, text message or telephone.

Personal Data

Any personal data you share with me, including your name and contact details, will be held securely. This information is used in the supply of counselling and in the administration of Merri Mayers Counselling. How this information is stored, for how long, and how confidentiality around it is handled is supplied at an initial assessment session or if requested beforehand.

If you have any questions, please contact:

Personal Data Collected

This website does not collect personal data. It does not use cookies, nor does it subscribe to google analytics. Its server providers may log your IP address for security purposes to add detection and prevention of hacking.

Communications

When you contact me by email, I keep a record of the correspondence. If you choose to enter therapy, this record will be held for seven years after therapy concludes as per current legal guidelines, otherwise it will be destroyed after a period of four weeks. At this time, my email system is unencrypted and its security cannot be completely secure. By using email to communicate with me, you are accepting this and acknowledging that no system can be completely secure. You may decide to carefully consider what you include in your emails.
